the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion, from 1.1 billion in 1980 to 2.3 billion in 1999 (United Nations 2000). The number of children under 15 years of age in the world is projected to increase to 2.8 billion by 2015 (United Nations 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the world, and the United Nations has developed a series of goals for children. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has developed a series of goals for children, which are known as the 'Millennium Goals for Children'. These goals are designed to ensure that all children in the world have access to basic education, health care, and nutrition (United Nations 2000).

The United Nations has also developed a series of goals for children, which are known as the 'Millennium Goals for Children'.
